Your attendance is requested for follow-up PATHS training at the University of Manchester. This half-day training workshop is an essential element of the PATHS to Success project, and is also an opportunity to further your continuing professional development in social and emotional learning. The training will be led by Elaine Berrena of the Penn State University Prevention Research Centre and supported by our three PATHS psychologists. The workshop will provide an opportunity to explore early successes and challenges, consider implementation issues, and revisit core components of the programme. Importantly, it will also be a chance to share examples of good practice among schools involved in the project

Staff are only required to attend one of the two half-day sessions – please confirm your preferred time (you can send some teachers in the morning and some in the afternoon if this is more convenient) as soon as possible by email (alexandra.barlow@manchester.ac.uk) or telephone (0161 275 3504).

PATHS Tip for Success: Follow-up training for class teachers is a really useful means of reflecting on progress in implementation, thinking about how challenges can be overcome and learning from other schools
